The class of 2014 celebrates Pat Herrington and her thirty years of dedication serving the students of BHS

Ms. Pat Herrington
Spanish Teacher

Walk by room 336 at BHS first lunch any day of the week and you'll hear sounds of laughter.
Pat Herrington dispenses tutoring, advice, and a safe place to be for students who don't care to be part of the general cafeteria madness.
It's just part of Ms. Herrington's personality to make herself available to all who seek her help.
She puts her whole being into the job.

She's a terrific teacher - creative, innovative, able to teach students in all levels.
I've seen her teach Spanish 1, where she gets students lacking in confidence and motivation, to enjoy learning Spanish.
By using humor, cartoons that she draws herself, and music, often bringing her guitar to class, through role play and games of all sorts, she gets reluctant students to engage with the Spanish language.

I've also seen Ms. Herrington teach highly motivated, demanding students.
She has designed a rich curriculm for all the levels she's taught.
She gets those students to discuss highly intellectual topics in Spanish that are relevant to their lives.
She makes learning grammar fun, a tall task, by getting the whole class to sing a pop song.

Ms Herrington's great work extends beyond the classroom.
Soon after joining the World Language department in the mid 80s she began taking students to Cuernavaca, Mexico. Thirty years later the Mexico trip has become an institution at our school.
The trip is a reflection of her philosophy of teaching, learning and life.
The students do rigorous work at The Cuahnahuac Academy for 5 hours a day, and live with Mexican families, but there is time left for fun activities that foster an appreciation for Mexican culture.
The students come back to BHS culturally enriched and more motivated to learn Spanish.

Ms. Herrington's has also been a leader of the Gay - Straight Alliance in our school.
Her classroom after school has become a place where students feel safe to discuss issues that are important in their lives.
Ms. Herrington has also been a great mentor to the younger teachers in the World Language Department.
There's nothing I love more than going by Pat's room around three thirty in the afternoon and getting her talking about her sons Jesse and Josie.
Her love is unconditional; her love is strong.
There's nothing I love more than getting Pat talking about teaching, or about life in general. despite her busy life, she always makes time to listen, to share ideas, images, and songs.

Pat Herrington is a wonderful teacher, colleague, and friend.
She is dedicated, warm-hearted, and kind.
For the past three decades Pat Herrington has helped make Brookline High School a better place to teach and learn.

OBEY

TEACHERS WE WILL ALWAYS REMEMBER

Mary Burchenal, English

Mrs. Burchenal made me realize how truly awesome reading and writing is. Mrs. Burchenal is a pretty amazing teacher and somehow manages to make learning fun.

- Michaela Sickles

Ricardo Calleja, Spanish

Mr. Calleja is such a passionate teacher. It has been really great having him for two years, he's helped me to improve my spanish a lot.

-Jane Jurayj

Malcolm Cawthorne, History

Mr. Cawthorne has always been such a positive and influential figure. Not only is he a great history teacher, but he's a great role model to many of us. He's very friendly and easy to talk to and his class was always something to look forward to. He is no doubt one of my favorite teachers at Brookline High.

-Lesly Balanzar

Elizabeth Crane, Science

The energy Mrs. Crane brings to the classroom is unparalled. Mrs. Crane keeps us motivated and involved as she entices us to understand major concepts and connections, rather than mindlessly memorize facts.

-Talia Burstein

Keira Flynn-Carson, English

Mrs. Carson is an incredible teacher. She pushes students to reexamine the way they think and be better people. She truly cares about us and makes everyone feel valued in her classroom.

-Aaron Sege

Craig Friedland, Mathamatics

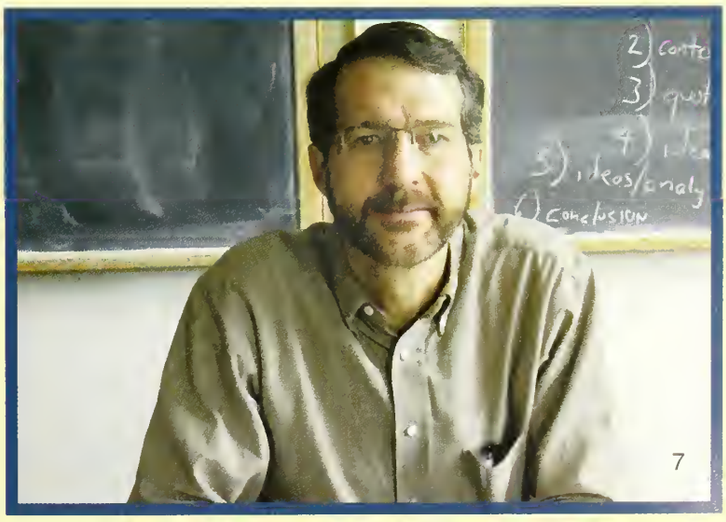
Mr. Friedland can always put a smile on his students faces. His kindness, ability to be understanding, goofy humor and tissue box wall makes his classroom a very welcoming and comforting environment. His teaching style is impressive; I have learned a lot being in his class this year.

-Sarah Olafsson

Leon Kestenbaum, Photography

Mr. K is one of the most dedicated teachers I've ever met. He really makes students go to the height of their potential and encourages them to think critically. I'm very grateful to have had him for the last four years as both a teacher and a mentor.

-Ethan Roubenoff



Aubrey Love, Science

Mr. Love genuinly cares about us as people, not just as students or players.

-Noa Sklar

Emily McGinnis, Spanish

Mrs. McGinnis is really funny and relatable. She creates an enjoyable and laid back atmosphere that is really unique in an AP class.

-Julia Lejeune

Anthony Meyer, English

Mr. Meyer always came into class with a smile on his face and a good sense of humor. His class was one of the few classes that I really enjoyed in my high school career.

-Lena Smith

Susan Moreno, Special Education

Mrs. Moreno has been my BHS-specific Google. If I had a question about the High School, believe me, I'm feeling lucky.

-Kit Livingston

Elizabeth Redding, Mathamatics

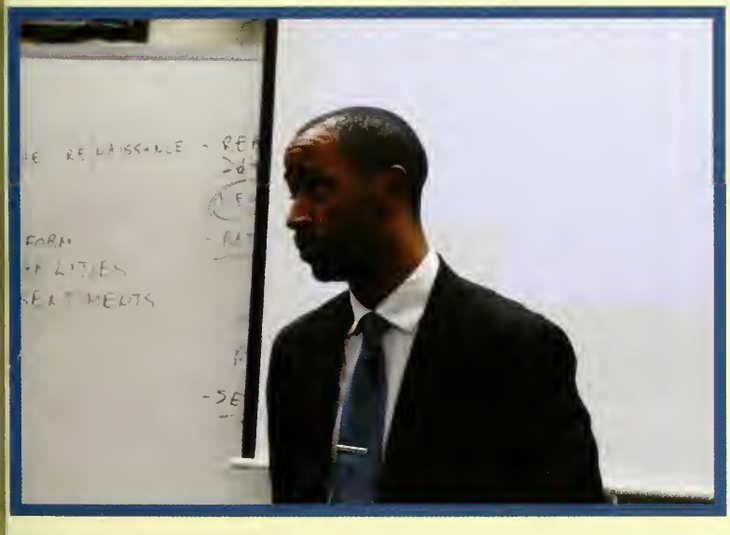
Dean Redding is more than a math teacher and a dean. She has been there for me no matter what. She is an inspiring person and I will truly miss her.

-Mia Svirsky

Nicholas Rothstein, English

Mr. Rothstein cares. He always wants his students to do well in and outside of the classroom. It's great having a teacher in the building who is willing to spend his free time helping out his students.

-Kristina Wolinski



Christopher Vick, AASP

Dr. Vick has been in my life long before I came to the high school. He has always been the goofy yet serious person that I could go to for anything. He has always believed in me and encouraged me to be an exceptional student. I will miss his corny jokes, infamous death stare, and his kind words.

-GiAnna Gray

Summer Williams, Performing Arts

Summer is a born entertainer, a juggler, who balances being a teacher, a producer, an award-winning director and a mentor, all in a day. She miraculously manages to give 100% of her attention, support and expertise with clarity and humor; she's as warm as her name suggests :)

Teen Center opens doors to community youth

EOIN WALSH
Business Team

Paul Epstein, resident of the Brookline Teen Center's Board of Directors and a social worker at the high school, said last year of the BTC's future, "There's no end to the possibilities if you let your imagination run a little bit."

That door of possibilities for teenagers in Brookline has been pushed wide open with the grand opening of the BTC, which took place on Sept. 15.

The opening signified a new era for Brookline teenagers, said teen intern Govind Srivastav. The occasion, attended by hundreds of people, recognized those who made this achievement possible and the building that will house this new age. With a constant stream of people, music and food, the atmosphere was one of expectation, realization, appreciation and joy. One of the most delighted people at the opening was Representative Joe Kennedy.

Rep. Joe Kennedy spoke at the grand opening of the Brookline Teen Center on Sept. 15. The grand opening honored several figures integral to the center's creation.

"I am extraordinarily excited to see where this goes," Kennedy said. "It is a testament to Paul Epstein's work and to the community. And you can tell from the packed house today that they have succeeded and certainly gone beyond my wildest imaginations. This moment is one of those things that makes it a joy to represent the town of Brookline."

In addition to Kennedy, many other notable figures attended the opening, including Peter Gammons (Major League Baseball analyst), Theo Epstein (former general manager of the Boston Red Sox and current general manager of the Chicago Cubs) and Governor Michael Dukakis (former Massachusetts governor and 1988 Democratic presidential nominee). In addition, the BTC played a video message from television host and Brookline native Conan

The new attendance policy creates a cap of 21 absences per class, with absences counted on the Aspen X2 portal.

Attendance policy gets mixed reviews

ANTHONY POLUYANOFF
Business Team

The new attendance policy, which went into effect at the start of this school year, has added a key feature to the previous attendance policy: an absence cap.

According to Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason, the policy will limit student absences, both excused and unexcused, to 21 for each full-year class and 11 for each half-year class. Any absence after that cap results in a loss of credit for the class. The policy affects all of the school, including SWS and the Winthrop House. Both Mason and the School Committee supported the idea of the 21/11 absence cap.

"The policy is intended to emphasize the importance that faculty place on being in class," Mason said. "There is a limit to how many times you can be excused and understandably absent."

The new policy will also change the previous AWOL appeals process. According to The Handbook, six AWOLs (as opposed to the previous five) in a course will result in no credit for the course, but a chance to appeal for credit. At the 10th AWOL, the student receives no credit and has no chance to appeal for it.

The tardiness policy has also been revised. If a student arrives 20 minutes or more after class begins, the student is marked "tardy/absent," which counts towards the total absence cap. The student is allowed to arrange make-up time at their teacher's discretion. After the student completes make-up time, the tardy/absent is changed to a tardy/present,

Preseason party leads to several soccer suspensions

EMMANUEL D'AGOSTINO & MAYA MARGOLIS
Opinions Writing Editor & Arts Layout Editor

Following a preseason party, 12 student athletes, eight from girls soccer and four from boys soccer, were suspended from their respective teams

The party, hosted by a member of the boys varsity soccer team, took place on Monday, Aug. 26, the first official day of preseason, according to a junior who attended the party. According to the junior, there were at least 35, maybe 40, students present, including members of sports teams other than soccer.

The school found out about the event via a photo shared on social media, according to girls varsity soccer coach Joslyn Vendola.

"A parent had seen the picture on Facebook and turned it into my coach," a member of the girls varsity soccer team said.

The girls varsity soccer player said she was really surprised when Vendola confronted her. They were on their way to a soccer bonding trip, and it was the last thing that she expected, she said. When Vendola brought the photograph to the two athletes in the photo, they admitted to attending the party and were suspended from the team.

Approximately four days later, the coach learned that more of her athletes had been at the party and asked people to confess, said the member of the girls varsity soccer team.

"We were basically all setting up at Sky-Line, underneath the gazebo, getting ready for practice, and Coach Love and Joslyn came over to us," girls varsity soccer captain Maya Chan said. "They basically hinted that they knew that more people were at the party and they would like people to step up. It was really, really hard and obviously very uncomfortable

Bike-a-thon puts the brakes on cancer

CAROLINE FISHKIN
Staff Writer

Along with thousands of participants from across the nation, junior Sam Geschickter and senior Kira Brown biked over 50 miles for the Pan-Mass Challenge on Aug. 3 and 4. Bikers rode 11 different bike routes going through 46 different towns and cities in Massachusetts.

Started in 1980 by Billy Starr, the PMC is an annual bike-a-thon that raises money for cancer research and treatment at the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute. This year, the PMC raised $39 million, bringing the totals from the past 33 years to $414 million.

Starr established the PMC when cancer devastated his family.

"I started the PMC after having lost my mother, my uncle, and my cousin to cancer in the 70s," Starr said. "It changed my life. I wanted to join this battle."

Brown and Geschickter were among some of the younger participants who went beyond expectation and exceeded the $500 fundraiser minimum.

"I sent out letters to friends and family and put a Facebook link to my profile," Brown said. "I asked for donations. You have a certain amount of money you need to raise or else you pay the difference yourself."

Starr said that he hopes more teens will join because of increasing awareness of PMC.

For both Brown and Geschickter, the PMC is much more than just a fundraiser.

According to Geschickter, the PMC brings his family together. Geschickter's father has been riding for the past 20 years, and his mother has been heavily involved for the past 15 years. Geschickter became inspired to participate through them.

"The PMC means a lot to us as a family. We have a lot of family members who have suffered from cancer," Geschickter said. "My dad started the PMC the year after my grandmother was diagnosed with leukemia. She's been diagnosed with cancer four times. He's been doing it ever since."

Like Geschickter, Brown said that her family's involvement in the PMC inspired her to participate as well. Growing up, she made peanut butter and jelly sandwiches at rest stops. However, according to Brown, it was the decision to ride two years ago that completely changed her.

"There were times where I would be riding to rest stops and there would be people holding up signs for their loved ones: people who passed away from cancer, people who survived cancer," she said. "On each side of the road, there were signs with kids on them, everyone cheering the riders on, and I cried. The PMC has made me realize it's really not just about me. It's about a lot of other people and the struggles other people go through, and it's time for me to stop focusing on myself and instead give back to others."

Senior Sylvie Florman was one of those people shouting her support for the riders. Florman has gone to Wellfleet Cape Cod to cheer on her dad, uncle and the other riders for the past eight years. She said that especially for her father, a cancer survivor, the weekend is dedicated to Florman's mother, who died from lung cancer two and a half years ago.

"We give them water and cheer them on," Florman said. "I make signs with my little cousins and scream as the riders go by. Then, we drive to Provincetown and wait at the finish line as they all ride in. It's a really exciting and all-around joyful event. People are standing around wearing 'survivor' shirts, and they all get on a party ferry with fountains and a band and celebrate their way back to the Boston Harbor."

Volunteering and donating are two ways that students can get involved. Attending the bike-a-thon and cheering people on are also ways of supporting the cause. According to Brown, getting involved however you can is the greatest gift you can give.

"I can't stop cancer," Brown said. "But I'm helping the search for a cure, and that's pretty special."

Golf coach hones in on player mentality

JK SUH
Business Team

"The day I stop getting nervous is the day I retire," varsity golf coach Bill Camelio said.

Camelio has been coaching at the high school for 16 years and has no plans to retire soon. Prior to his arrival at the high school, Camelio coached baseball at Needham High School and Newton South High School for more than 20 years. He served as a bartender at Fenway Park for 23 years and has worked various jobs at the Country Club in Brookline since 1963.

From his decades of coaching sports, Camelio has found that mental strength is a key component in any sport, but especially golf.

"That's what the game is all about," Camelio said. "It's all mental. These kids know how to hit a golf ball and they'll get better as their life progresses. That's what makes Tiger Woods the best player in the world. He's mentally tougher than anyone else out there. That's how I want these kids to be."

There is a major factor keeping Camelio coming back year after year to coach.

"Two words: the kids," Camelio said. "It's the only answer I know. You're talking about a very special group of kids who play golf. This is a gentleman's sport and the kids are marvelous."

More than one of Camelio's players said that he does not have a traditional style of coaching. According to junior Cooper Lev, Camelio's practices focus not on technical training, but mental strategy.

Lev said Camelio coaches them on the mentality they should have before and after every shot during matches.

"I tell these kids to think, 'I'm down eight strokes, let's make it six. I'm down six strokes, let's make it four,'" Camelio said. "And even when they're up six or seven strokes, I tell them to make it ten. It's all about what's between the ears."

Boys captain, senior Stanford Belamarich, said the coach knows exactly what to say to the players during a match and how it will affect their game. Belamarich also noted that Camelio's practices do not spend

Soccer team persists despite racial slurs

TASOULA BURK
Business Manager

The boys varsity soccer team said that trash talking went too far at a recent home game when a Framingham soccer player directed a racial slur at two Brookline players, sophomores Elijah Elmore and Tonnis James.

Although the referees said they did not hear or see what occurred, this event marked a pivotal moment for the team, creating an even stronger bond between the boys.

"We were all pretty shocked at first and took a step back," Elmore said. "It was overwhelming because it was like trash talking to another level. There's a difference between trash talking and bringing other things into the game like race. Trash talking is all part of the game, but racial slurs are definitely not."

Other teammates shared similar reactions when they first heard what had happened out on the field.

"I was outraged and disappointed that the referees did nothing about it," senior and co-captain Dimitri Makrigiorgos said. "When I saw that the opposing player wasn't going to be carded, I was upset, but I knew that the best thing was to

CLUB FAIR REPORT

Anime Club (room 214)

Explore your passion for Japanese culture, animation, comics and television shows. There is also an annual pillow fight where members dress up and compete.

"It's super fun and a great way to make friends," Lily MacGillivray said.

Asian Pacific American Club (room 200)

A student-run group that encourages connections to broaden your network within the Asian community. It strives to help the Asian community by participating in fundraisers and facilitating the Lunar New Year celebration at the high school.

"I joined freshman year because I was Asian and it was an Asian club, but I joined mainly because it was a fun place to hang out," junior Kenny Szeto said.

BHS African Outreach (room 236)

The club fundraises for a South African clinic that educates orphans whose parents have died due to HIV/AIDS.

"I joined because all of my family lives in South Africa and I've seen lots of poverty there and I decided we should do something to help out," junior Devin Videlfsky said.

BHS Book Club (room 278)

A club where members read a book each month and then discuss it as a group. This year, the club will pick books from a variety of countries.

"To be a worldly kind of person and to know about different cultures, you don't just have to travel, but also read the literature of others places," a senior club member said.

BHS Superfans (room 381)

A club that supports the school's teams by gathering more fans, selling T-shirts and more. The Superfans allow people to support a team when they aren't a member of it.

"We're just trying to make a better sense of community and unification around the school," senior Sammy Koenig said.

Brookline Cambodia Partnership (room 392)

A club that helps educate girls in rural Cambodia at the Brookline Samlahn School, BHS's sister school that the club built in 2009. The club raises money to add to the school's staff and facilities and sponsors specific girls to go there yearly.

"This club keeps my eyes open, keeps my mind open to the fact that not everyone has such amazing opportunities as we do here at BHS. It's really nice to ground me in a way," senior Eliza Fox said.

Brookline Literacy Partnership (room 346)

The club aims to raise the literacy rates of children in the Greater Boston Area through fundraising and tutoring at the Mather School in Dorchester.

"I really like making a difference, and this is one of the clubs at BHS that you join and you can immediately see how much of an impact it is having on the world around you," junior Melanie Grad-Freilich said.

Business Club (UA 31)

Part of DECA, a club that participates in national and international business competitions ranging from sports marketing, retail, stock market games, business management, marketing and many more options.

"We started this club this year actually, because we found out about this organization and we wanted to take part in it. Its a great organization, many, many people love it and we [BHS] are about to join," Nitzan Mokady said.

C.A.R.E. (room 341)

The club helps raise money for charities such as the Jimmy Fund to help support people with cancer.

"I think its a really good idea for Brookline High to participate and show that we really care about them [people with cancer] and we care for this cause," Lucy Hwang said.

CBC/Rise

The club encourages students to spend time with CBC and RISE special education students. Activities include arts and crafts, basketball, dance classes and more and the meeting time is flexible: any free block or X-block.

"Our goal is to integrate our CBC and Rise students with Brookline High students. While doing this, you will also be fulfilling your volunteer hours," Ashley Secor, a paraprofessional for RISE, said.

Chess Club (room 145)

The club has a place for everyone, from beginners who just play for fun to advanced players who compete at various chess tournaments throughout the year.

"Chess is a great skill, It's an awesome thing to have in the future, a great pastime, and it helps you really connect with a lot of different people all over the world," senior Joseph Schiarizzi said.

Christian Club (room 344)

A club for both Christians and non-Christians, focused on having open discussions and creating a friendly atmosphere where members feel comfortable expressing their beliefs.

"People in this club feel like family. We're all very friendly towards each other and we're all really accepting," junior Sidney Chien said.

Circle of Women BHS Chapter (room 381)

A club that works to spread education and literacy in developing countries. The members work toward this goal by raising awareness and fundraising for the bigger organization Circle of Women.

"Every student has the potential to make a difference in their school, their community and the global community. And so it's all about students helping students and taking responsibility for themselves and international conflicts," junior Katherine Fleming said.

Curling Club (The Country Club)

A club to curl with friends on a flexible schedule. Curling is a fun game, and this club is one of the only places that gives people the opportunity to try curling in a safe and relaxed environment.

"You get to curl! Where else can you curl? It's so fun. It's a very social sport. You get to meet a lot of people and try new things," sophomore Raphael Chinca said.

Double Dutch Club (science room)

A club where members practice jumping rope two ropes at a same time.

"It's a very unique sport, and we do a lot of club bonding. It really teaches you a lot about teamwork since Double Dutch isn't a sport you can do alone," junior Kako Yamada said.

Dreamfar High School Marathon Team (science room)

A team of students from 11 Greater Boston areas who train together to run a marathon in the spring.

"Less than 1 percent of people ever run a marathon. It is an amazing life changing experience that is great for so many students. Most of our students come back year after year to run with us. There are several seniors this year who will be running their third marathon with the program," said Elsbeth Leslie, a science teacher and club coordinator.

The BHS Ensemble Club (auditorium)

A musical group that works on getting talented musicians who might be shy or not otherwise meet with other musicians to play together and perform (such as at open mic nights).

"It's fun. You get to perform for other people, and you don't have to be outgoing or a musical prodigy to do it," senior Alan Peralta said.

Environmental Action Club (room 361)

A social justice group that uses direct action inside and outside of school to make our lives more green. They work on environmental issues to try and make the Brookline community more sustainable.

Film Club

Members gather once a month in the MLK room or the UA viewing room to watch a movie and discuss aspects like directorial decisions and cinematography.

"People who love film and just love to hang out and watch movies should definitely join the club. You can learn a lot about cinematography and movies and discover your new favorite movie and experience every genre," a sophomore club member said.

Food Justice Club (room 346)

The club promotes awareness of the industrial food system, and students also garden.

"The more you learn about food, the more you get freaked out by it. By discussing the system, you make people think about what they're putting into their bodies," senior David Toppelberg said.

Habitat For Humanity (UA 33)

A worldwide wide organization devoted to making sure people have affordable housing. Members raise money for and even build housing for those without it.

"Going on the build site is a really great, hands-on experience, but no matter what, it always feels like I'm making the world better whenever I participate," senior Max Sternlicht said.

Help Committee (room 370)

A club that helps with anything there is around the school, from the basics, like students needing help with homework, to organizing school events that need staff.

"I feel like there are al lot of clubs that emphasize out-of-school organization and community service support in that way, but I don't see many clubs that focus inside the school. I just want to help the school as much as I can and feel a connection to Brookline High," sophomore Alex Xu said.

Ice Skating Club

A newly formed club for students to explore their love of skating on the ice and connect with other skaters – any skill level welcome! Events are planned and posted on the Facebook group and held at the rink.

"There's not a really big community for figure skaters and I wanted to make it a bigger part of the BHS community. It's a little bit difficult finding members because not everyone is into skating, but I still wanted to make it open for people to join because it is really fun," club leader Lillian Pan said.

Innovative Club (science room)

A group that works on designing and building engineering projects and businesses about which students are passionate. Students enter several engineering competitions throughout the year, and have the opportunity to hear accomplished engineers from the Boston area as guest speakers.

"I'm looking forward to seeing the power of the students and what they can do. People who never thought they could start a business can actually start one, or people who didn't think they have funding for some great idea, can actually get funding for it," freshman Amir Siraj said.

Interact Club

A community service club, essentially the junior portion of the Brookline Rotary Club. Students have opportunities to participate in both local and international service projects. The club meets according to what is most convenient for its members.

Why Join: "We're looking for students with good ideas, because we want your ideas. This is something where you do something and you see results of what you do, and you have fun while doing it," Marina Brodskaya said.

Intramurals

Intramurals are a chance for kids to be active outside of school without the commitment of being on a team. Right now, in the fall, they offer basketball, fitness center, frisbee and soccer. We plan to have a spinning group, rock climbing and really anything anyone is interested in. Basketball meets in Tappan Gym 1. Soccer and frisbee meet in the pavilion. Fitness Center meets in the Tappan building (Monday, Wednesday, Thursday 3-4:30 p.m.).

"It gives kids a place to be active, a place to meet other kids, to have some fun and relieve some stress. The number one issue reported on our survey is stress. It help the kids and their stresses when they have some fun," said Health and Fitness Curriculum Coordinator Teddi Jacobs.

Movie Club

A club that watches and discusses movies while eating food. They meet during X-block and after school (the room has not yet been announced).

"We talk about the actors and actresses and about the roles that they play. We also analyze the movies, [looking at] the genre and the choices the director made and the music that they chose," said senior Breanna Flattes.

Math Team (room 262)

Math team is comprised of a group of students who are interested in math beyond the classroom. Students who like math join to look at unconventional problems and compete against other schools once a month.

"Last practice it was pretty neat to see almost 20 people there and oftentimes things like this will start big and then interest dwindles, but the fact that we have maintained almost 20 members so far is very cool and I hope it continues," math teacher Nick Pero said.

Ocean Science Club

An educational club that learns about ocean science and competes in multiple competitions.

"We have really good food. It's a really friendly environment for everyone," said senior Janice Lee, the club co-captain.

One Child at a Time (room 383)

By collecting fundraising money, this club focuses on sending a Kenyan girl through high school and communicating with her through her journey via pen pal letters. The club is currently sponsoring a young girl named Georgina.

"I thought it would be really fun to communicate with someone in Kenya and help educate a girl because that is really important," freshman Haley Evans said.

Popcorn Dance Club

A dance club open to beginners that focuses on both American and Asian dance music. The club focuses more on enjoying dance than being skilled, and has a supportive Asian community.

"I think it provides a really good space for Asian kids, like Asian international students, to be here and belong," club leader and junior Esther Oh said.

Pulsera Project (room 309)

The club sells bracelets from Central America to help raise money for workers in Nicaragua while promoting education. The goal is to reduce the number of people working in sweatshops, huge factories with terrible labor conditions and endless hours. Bracelets are sold throughout the school as well as in bake sales in surrounding areas.

"It's very laid back and low commitment. You can even join another club at the same time and still be making a difference," said sophomore Helen Murray.

Red Cross Club (room 304)

A club that works toward raising money for relief aid for places in difficult situations. Last year, they raised money for Hurricane Sandy relief and for vaccinations in poorer countries.

"Even a little contribution can help a lot. You can actually see the progress of what your money is going to," club co-president and junior Gillian Orlando-Milbauer said.

Refractions Literary Magazine (room 332)

An annual literary magazine that features students' creative writing and artwork. Club members assemble the magazine and choose what material gets published.

"I like to read about other students' creative writing, and it's a fun way for everyone to connect. It's a good way to show students who have talent in creative writing," senior Linda Jiang said.

Robotics

The team builds and designs robots to compete nationwide.

"It's very interesting and fun. You get to learn a lot about robots. You learn programming, mechanics, engineering and how to manufacture products and robots. It's really fun to join and win these robotics competitions," senior Christophe Hiltebrandt-Mcintosh said.

SEPIA

SEPIA stands for Students Engaged in Pro-Israel Advocacy. The club's main focus is strengthening American-Israeli bonds.

"People should join SEPIA because, like most BHS clubs, it is for a good cause. Obviously, as a high school club we don't have a large influence, but we are working on it. This club is giving us experience to take to college where I know we will be active pro-Israel people," senior Talia Burstein said.

SHOP Club

SHOP stands for Students Helping Old People. A student (or two) will be assigned an elderly person in Brookline who is unable to buy groceries for themselves. Once a week the student will visit their home and receive money to do their groceries for them.

"It's interesting to talk to a person of a different generation. You help your own community, not like somewhere far away where you can't feel the impact," senior Mimi Sax said.

The Starfish Project (room 336)

An organization working to raise money for women in Ethiopia who suffer from a health condition that occurs in women from having babies when they're too young. They make bracelets to raise awareness and money for these people.

"It's a club that doesn't require a lot of commitment, only X-block, and gives you the opportunity to help give girls in developing countries, helping to give them new lives," sophomore Sabine Sussman said.

Strategic Games Club (room 303)

A club where students bring in favorite games to play and find people to play them. In the future, they are planning to have some tournaments during the meetings, but it is mostly just for fun.

"We founded this club because it had fallen off and we realized that there wasn't really a place for us to sit down and play games and have fun. There's no commitment, so show your face once and come back if you like it," senior Mosby Hilliard said.

Students For Palestinian Rights (room 403)

Raises awareness of what's happening in occupied territories and why we should care.

"We watch lots of cool films and talk to people suffering under occupation," senior Dan Solomon said.

Model UN prepares for Berlin conference

After four years of hard work, the wall separating Brookline and Berlin has fallen, and the Model United Nations Club of the high school will venture this month to the nation for the first time.

Senior Diego Fernandez-Pages has been working on the trip since his freshmen year. "Previous Secretary Generals had compiled applications to bring the school committee every year, and finally, we wrote it for the fourth time last year, and we pushed it through the school committee, and it worked, and we got everything together" said Pages.

On Nov. 18, they will travel to participate in a rigorous three-day-long Berlin Model United Nations Conference.

"Model UN is all about the simulation of the United Nations, and you ideally want to get as close as possible to simulating the real experience, so going to a foreign country and traveling where they have different interests really culminates it all together," junior Josh Lepson said.

The club has been assigned to play the roles of the Iraqi and Romanian delegations and will represent them in five committees: Human Rights, Disarmament, Politics, Environment and a special committee.

According to the Berlin Model UN's website, over 700 students from all over the world will participate in the event. There will be opening and closing ceremonies in which each country gives a welcome address and policy speech.

According to Fernandez-Pages, after the opening ceremonies and speeches are done, they will split up into the five committees and attempt to come up with resolutions about specific issues. They will then reconvene and engage in an unmoderated madhouse of a debate.

Senior Henry Shreffler, the club's secretary general, hopes to gain a greater understanding of cultural differences and use that to find solutions to international problems.

Relaxed security policies shape school ambiance

JEREMY MARGOLIS

Last fall, 28 people were killed in an elementary school shooting in Newtown, Ct. From 2000-2010, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, there were 431 school-associated violent deaths.

In 2008, according to the U.S. Census Bureau, 89 percent of public schools in the country locked or monitored their doors during the school day. Another 55 percent used security cameras. Brookline High School does neither.

Assistant Headmaster Hal Mason said that the lack of security measures helps to shape the school environment.

"This is a high school that is pretty unique in that it has open campus, and to make some of those changes as have been made in other places we think takes away a fundamental part of what Brookline High School is," Mason said.

Instead of having locks or metal detectors, the school employs two plain-clothed, unarmed security aides.

They monitor the front of the building in the morning and the cafeteria during lunch time, but the rest of their days often vary, they said. The biggest key to their job: relationship building.

"A huge part of the job is us having the ability to go and meet students and really connect, to spend a lot of time building relationships and getting to know kids and letting kids know that we are a safe, reliable resource," security aide Aaron Kimbro said.

The informality of the security aides and the school in general is intentional, according to Mason.

"We don't want this to be a prison. In some places they've

The Circle of Women club is determined to do something about women's illiteracy around the world.

The club is a local chapter of an organization centered at Harvard University, also called the Circle of Women.

According to the club presidents, juniors Emily Summers and Katherine Fleming, the organization has succeeded in raising funds to build schools in Afghanistan, Pakistan, India and Malawi.

Summers said that she and Fleming are motivated by a desire to lift up women and girls.

"We both think education is a central tool to helping girls in many other ways and changing the world one community at a time," she said.

Fleming said another purpose of the club is to inspire students to take initiative.

"Every student has the potential to make a difference in their school, their community and the global community," Fleming said. "It's all about students helping students and taking responsibility for themselves and international conflicts."

Mims' departure results in new leadership

Associate Deans Lisa Redding and Brian Poon, and Deans of Students Anthony Meyer and Scott Butchart all have new positions in the administration this year.

The deans' teams in both suites have been rearranged and filled with a mixture of both interim and permanent administrators after both deans of students ended their tenures in the past year.

After Anthony Meyer was tapped to succeed Diane Lande as dean of students for the classes of 2014 and 2016 last spring, Lisa Redding '89 has taken Meyer's place as associate dean for the class of 2014.

Scott Butchart will succeed Dean of Students Adrian Mims, who left over the summer to work with the Calculus Project, as interim dean of students for the classes of 2015 and 2017. Brian Poon, filling Buchart's old role, will be the interim associate dean for the freshman class. Poon and Butchart will hold their current positions for one year while the proceedings for hiring a new dean are carried out, according to Holman.

"Mr. Butchart was a finalist for this past spring search, so he was the likely person to tap to be the acting dean for this year, and I'm very grateful he said yes," Holman said.

According to Holman, candidates for the permanent dean position must go through several rounds of interviews, the first with a dean's search committee made up of faculty, counselors, administrators, parents and students. The committee will determine the characteristics it is looking for in a new dean before the interviews begin as well as the questions to ask candidates; after the first round of interviews, all candidates will be brought in for individual interviews. Finalists for the position will then be determined.

"The three dean candidates come to the school, they meet with me, they meet with the assistant headmaster, they meet as a group with the curriculum coordinator, they meet as a group with the deans," Holman said. "They have an open faculty forum, where the faculty can ask each candidate questions, and they meet in the evening with a open parent forum where the parents can ask questions, and then the final recommendation of a new dean resides with me."

Holman stressed the importance of the deans within the school.

"All of the deans and associate deans hold the school culture and student culture in their hands. They, with the guidance counselors, are the main contact outside of class with kids," Holman said. "The two deans are in charge of communicating well to the students the expectation and culture of Brookline High School. And that is incredibly important."

Holman's main concern about the impact of the changes in staffing lay in how she could best help the new deans and administrators adjust to their positions.

"The two academic dean positions are big positions that take a lot of time, take a lot of commitment, take a lot of skill and parent, student and faculty relations," Holman said. "They're so time consuming, so, like with any administrative job the concern was how well I support Dean Butchart and Dean Meyer stepping into these positions so that they can be successful. I have utmost confidence in them, and my concern was more how would I be able to support them, because I want to support them optimally."

Policy implements new absence cap

and is no longer counted towards the 21 absence cap, according to The Handbook.

Field trips, a major concern for students during the introductory assembly to the new policy last June, are still counted towards the 21 total absence cap. According to Mason, school field trips are an important part of learning, but students should make their own decisions about whether or not to go.

"Last year we took three-fouths of the junior class to see a movie, The Great Gatsby. It was a valuable and important field trip for those kids," Mason said. "But if it's March, and you've already been out of class 15 times, for whatever good reason, and a field trip comes up, well that might be the day that you should say 'You know what? I can't go to The Great Gatsby today and miss another biology class.'"

According to Peter Sedlak, former co-chair of Faculty Council, a subcommittee, led by former Dean Diane Lande and composed of parents, students and teachers, drafted a change to the attendance policy eight years ago. The draft languished until four years ago, when Faculty Council co-chairs Sedlak and Rebecca Hayden revived efforts to change the policy. Sedlak said that the previous attendance policy had issues.

"I believe that the attendance policy was an unfair system that created a lot of inequity between students, with some being able to amass quite a large number of absences and not lose credit for the course," Sedlak said.

Sedlak said he is particularly pleased that the new policy holds students accountable for their attendance.

"It allows students to actually have the responsibility to control their presence in the classroom," Sedlak said. "They have to make decisions. Already, seniors this year who were going to miss class decided against that."

Dean of Students Anthony Meyer is excited that class time is a top priority in the new policy.

"As long as the absence was excused, people could miss almost as many classes as they wanted to," Meyer said. "To me it's about communicating a strong message on how, quoting the policy, 'excellent student attendance promotes learning for all students in all classrooms.'"

Student opinion is divided on how effective the policy will be. Sophomore Simone St. Pierre said she appreciates the concreteness of the new policy.

"I know some people are kind of upset about it, but I think it's fine and pretty reasonable," St. Pierre said. "It's nice having an actual number of absences that are allowed, so I think it's pretty fine."

Some students have expressed concern that the attendance cap includes field trips, college visits and extended illnesses.

"I feel like it's not fair in the sense that if you have a field trip or a college visit, you shouldn't get penalized," senior Sofia Ordonez said. "The 21 absences is a lot, but if you're someone who gets sick a lot, it's not really fair."

SWS junior Devyn Perkins, dissatisfied with the policy's verdict on field trips, began a petition protesting the new policy. As of Sept. 25, his petition has 250 student and faculty signatures.

"The petition's goal is to make doctor's notes, school field trips and emotional problems, like if you had a breakdown during school and you had to sign out of class, not count towards the cap," Perkins said.

In addition to creating the petition, Perkins said he is working to bring his petition to the eyes of the administration and legislature.

"I talked to Ms. Holman and Dean Meyer, and I'm supposed to bring my signatures to them," Perkins said.

Even with contrasting opinions from students, both administration and teachers are predicting that the new policy will be beneficial to the school in the long run. Interim Dean of Students Scott Butchart said the policy is a positive addition to the school.

"I think it's clearer and more detailed, and it's more for parents and kids to pay attention," Butchart said. "I think it can only be better."

History teacher Malcolm Cawthorne said he is also confident that the new policy will be a smooth transition.

"I think the new attendance policy is going to be fine," Cawthorne said. "I think the large majority of Brookline kids won't even get close to the 21 absences, and for kids who really do have extenuating circumstances, Brookline is pretty good at fixing those."

of the appropriate difficulty, but Libenzon said he doesn't think that time is necessary.

"If you came to me and you said, 'It's hard,' I would ask you, 'Well then, why did you sign up for it in May?'" he said.

The pervading student opinion about the policy is not all negative, though. Junior Myra Johnson said she understands the values it is trying to instill, but feels the policy has some shortcomings.

"I think the intentions of it are good, but it's a little too long. Once you sign up for a class, you should be committing to take it next year, but two weeks is kind of stretching it," Johnson said. "I think with electives you'll survive not having a free block for a week or two, but if you want to switch up a level and you're not allowed to move up, having two weeks that you then have to catch up on is a lot."

Social studies teacher Michael Normant said that in the first two weeks of previous years students in his AP U.S. History classes would often tell him the class was too difficult and would switch down. This year, he said, no one has done that.

"In some ways I think it is really good because it gives kids a chance to get a feel for a class before deciding whether they want to be there or not," Normant said. "And also it gives me a chance to get a sense of who the students are that are in the class, to see whether or not it feels to me like they're in the right place."

Meyer acknowledged the mixed reaction the policy has received.

"One of the areas we've found frustration with is seniors, who have met their elective requirements and are in an elective which they think they're going to drop and don't need it to graduate. That's been a little trickier, so it's about communicating [with people] and trying to find what the best solution is," he said.

"As with anything," Meyer said, "we're giving it a try, I think for good reason, and we're going to get some feedback from counselors, department chairs and students to figure out how to shape it over time."

SPECIAL PULLOUT INSIDE: Let's talk about race

Calculus Project lives on

SOFIA TONG
Staff Writer

Before he took action, 60 to 70 percent of African-American students in Geometry Honors dropped down to Geometry Standard by second quarter every year, former Dean of Students Adrian Mims said.

"They had the same grades, they had the same recommendations from their teachers, yet they weren't succeeding at the same level as their white and Asian-American counterparts," Mims said.

According to Mims, examples like this of the achievement gap, or the difference in academic performance between African-American and Latino students and other demographics, pushed him to begin the Calculus Project.

Launched in the summer of 2009, the Calculus Project is an initiative to get more African-American and Latino students into AP or Honors Calculus by their senior year. It offers summer preview courses, a math tutoring center and an extensive staff support network.

Mims left his position at the high school early this school year in order to replicate the Calculus Project elsewhere across the nation. He is currently working with other schools in Massachusetts, New York and Florida.

The Calculus Project faces another change this spring: it will graduate its original cohort of students. In 2009, Mims recruited a handful of rising eighth graders to participate in the program. A little more than four years later, those students are now seniors and will be the first members of the project to go to college and eventually join the workforce.

Numerically, the Calculus Project has proven effective in raising the grades and test scores of the students in the program and increasing the enrollment of African-Americans and Latinos in higher level math courses, according to African-American Scholars Program Director Chris Vick.

"We have more Scholars in AP Calc than I've ever seen in my career," Vick said. "In 12 or 13 years we've had maybe one or two of my kids in AP Calc, and now we have six in AP, a whole mess of kids in Calculus Honors and even more in the pipeline for junior year."

Mims said he realized he was making a difference when he saw the first cohort leave eighth grade and enter freshman year.

"I looked at how they performed in Algebra in the eighth grade, and I saw that their MCAS scores had improved significantly," Mims said. "I also noticed that when all of the students who participated in the Calculus Project enrolled in Geometry Honors, not one of those students withdrew from Geometry Honors."

According to Mims, one of the key parts of the program is clustering, or grouping students from the Calculus Project into the same classes. Senior Alejandro Brown said this makes it easier for them to be engaged in class and work with others.

"I feel like we learn how to help each other," Brown said. "You never have a class where you learn how to work in groups like this, and I feel like since it's all people from the same background, they all want to strive to do their best. You learn how to work as a community."

Decreasing numbers in IMP lead to possible program cuts

The math department is exploring plans for the Interactive Math Program that could ultimately eliminate IMP 1 because of a lack of enrollment, according to Mathematics Curriculum Coordinator Joshua Paris.

IMP is a pathway in which algebra, geometry, algebra 2 and statistics are all woven throughout the curriculum of the four IMP classes, according to Paris.

In terms of pedagogy, IMP strives to impart information to the students through investigations that inspire individual discovery and collaboration with peers.

"What I love about it is it gives students the opportunity to learn math in a really different setting," math teacher Danielle Rabina, who teaches IMP, said. "IMP is masterfully designed so that kids can really go into depth and do discovery which they can't always have time for in another class."

Junior Kenneth Szeto, who was in IMP 2 his freshman year, said that a major difference between IMP and other math classes is that students are required to do more writing to explain their work.

Fletcher Hartman, a senior in IMP 4, said that although math is not his favorite subject in school, IMP offers a comfortable environment to learn and take risks.

"A fairly common thing about IMP students is that they don't have a lot of faith in their math knowledge, even if that's not necessarily the case," Hartman said. "IMP helps with that because you are very comfortable around the people and it's very OK to be wrong."

Paris said the mathematics department has noticed a steady trend of decreasing enrollment in IMP.

Due to this lack of registration, there has not been an IMP 1 class the past two years, and

Siraj skates at National Championships

AARON SEGE

Third to compete, she skated out in front of thousands of people for her one-minute warm up. Once that ended, she got into position and the music began.

Senior Yasmin Siraj competed in the U.S. Figure Skating Championships at TD Garden, the qualifier for the U.S. Olympic team, on Jan. 9 and 11.

Although her 16th-place overall finish was not high enough to qualify for the Olympic Games in Sochi, Siraj had said beforehand that qualifying was not the only goal.

"This being Olympic-qualifiers is a bonus; it's not like my end-all, be-all," she had said. "Really, my goal here is just to show off my hard work and enjoy myself. Whatever happens, happens."

As she prepared for the first competition on Thursday, Jan. 9, her emotions started to shift.

"I was super excited the week before and up until the day before, and I was also excited hours before the competition," Siraj said. "But I was a little bit too tense right before. But, oh well, you can't change that now."

Senior Yasmin Siraj competes in the two rounds of the U.S. Figure Skating Championships. Siraj finished in 16th overall on Jan. 9 and 11, missing a spot on Team USA for this year's Winter Olympics. Undaunted, she is still excited about skating.

Thursday night's round was a three-minute short program. Her first element was a triple toe loop-triple toe loop combination, which she said was the most challenging move in her program because it required vaulting into a second jump right after landing the first. She was not able to perform one of the triple toe loops as well as her second element, a single loop.

Despite successfully performing the rest of the elements, she finished 21st out of 21 that night. She said that it wasn't how she compared to other people that disappointed her, but rather her technical performance because that was in her control.

"It was more disappointing that I didn't skate my best," she said.

Siraj said that by the second competition on Saturday, Jan. 11, she had a renewed outlook.

"I just went in wanting to have a good time and really soak in every moment," she said.

Siraj said her favorite element from Saturday's long program was the triple lutz, a backward jump, because it has a lot of height and speed to it. Successfully completing all of her elements, she placed 13th out of 21 for the day.

Now that that competition season is over, Siraj said she is considering what type of future she wants in skating. She said that her main question is not what level of team she wants to make, but rather how much time she wants to put into skating after graduating from high school.

"I really want to get the full benefit of college," she said.

However, she said that she feels like all of her options include skating.

"If I really didn't feel like doing anything with skating, I could just teach some on the side," she said.

For now, not winning the competition has little bearing on Siraj's feelings about skating.

"This is a sport that I love to do, and there's lots of other things to look forward to," she said. "Life doesn't stop here."

A diving catch into the endzone, a successful charge through the crowd and a jarring tackle, all to the beat of heart-pumping music. Players on the boys varsity football team create highlight videos for multiple purposes, such as maintaining memories from their season, showing off their skills and attracting college interest.

The athletes make the videos using a website called Hudl. Once footage is uploaded to the website, athletes can pick out clips, organize their highlights into a video and add music.

Senior Daniel Bedjanov said he made his first video this school year in order to be able to reflect on the season.

"I made it to look back at the positives that I had with my season and to show everybody what I had," he said. "We had a bad season, but there were also positives that could come out of it. I just wanted to show what I brought to the table and how I helped the team out and contributed."

Senior Dashawn Richardson said that his primary intention in making the highlight videos was to get recruited to play football in college. He said that a number of schools have reached out to him and that he has communicated with about 15 schools over the past two years.

Hudl provides a profile with the player's information (including height, weight, positions, bench press, dash and squat), which colleges can view in addition to the videos.

"The coaches praised [my video] and were very happy and excited with what they saw," Richardson said. "They gave me feedback on how I could get better and improve my game."

This year Brookline's Finance Department raised the participation fee for sports at the high school from $200 to $300 per athlete.

According to Athletic Director Pete Rittenburg, the plans to increase the fees were brought up last year during yearly budget meetings.

"It was part of last year's budgeting process, and the fees are nothing new," Rittenburg said. "It's just that the amount's gone up."

After last year's budget meetings, the town reevaluated the budget, and $300 was the amount that came out, Rittenburg said.

Rittenburg said that this is the biggest fee increase he has seen during his time at the high school. Previous increases have been from $125 to $175 and $175 to $200, according to Rittenburg.

State considers local marijuana dispensary

As the town awaits a decision from the state, Brookline is buzzing about the possibility of a medical marijuana dispensary opening up.

Twenty states, including Massachusetts, have legalized medical marijuana, according to nonprofit public charity ProCon.org. Last year, the question of legalizing medical marijuana appeared on the ballot for Brookline and the rest of Massachusetts.

"In Brookline, over 70 percent of the voters said they wanted medical marijuana in Massachusetts," Brookline's Director of Health and Human Services Alan Balsam said. "So Brookline clearly came out in favor of it."

According to Balsam, the dispensary has to be a cash-only business. Only local and state governments have been passing medical marijuana laws and regulations. It is still illegal in the federal government, and banks do not want to get involved.

"Theoretically, the federal government could prosecute," Brookline Selectman Richard Benka said. "What has happened in practice is that the federal government has not prosecuted in situations where there has been reasonable local control, but federal government could always prosecute."

Health unit sheds light on depression

LIZZY FILINE

Some common attitudes about depression: "It's just sadness," or "They should just snap out of it."

The high school's health and fitness department is working to clear up misconceptions and help students get the help they need with the Break Free From Depression program from Boston Children's Hospital, according to health and fitness teacher Roberta Skoff.

This four-day unit was first implemented last year during the second semester as an effort to lower the rates of depression among adolescents in Brookline. It was taught for a second time this year, ending shortly before Thanksgiving vacation, according to health and fitness teacher Allyson Toney.

Skoff said a push for implementing a unit of this sort came from statistics showing high estimates for the number of adolescents in America with depression.

"More than 800,000 American teenagers suffer from depression each year, so the statistics are alarming," Skoff said. "The percentage of adolescents with depression that go undiagnosed or treated is 60 to 80 percent, and that's a lot. That's why they created the unit, and that's why the information is just so important to get across."

According to Skoff, the unit consisted of talking about overall mental health, depression, suicide, coping skills, stress and the differences among them. She said that they talked about the negative sentiments and misconceptions attached to depression.

"There shouldn't be a stigma attached to it," Skoff said. "If you have an illness like cancer or diabetes or something, people wouldn't make fun of you. And for them to hear that for a mental illness, there shouldn't be a stigma attached to it, that is very rewarding to me."

Health and fitness teacher Billy Graham said if he were to alter anything in the unit, it would be to lengthen it and make it available to other students besides freshmen.

"I think we shortchange our students, and the school is doing a disservice by not having health class more than a semester for an entire four years of high school," Graham said.

Some students said they felt the unit, although short, was enlightening and helpful because of the resources provided.

Before senior Obi Obiora got his driver's license, his morning commute from Hyde Park took an hour. He would ride the Commuter Rail downtown to Back Bay, walk to Copley and take the Green Line back out to Brookline Hills.

Now that Obiora can drive, his commute is shorter – but getting to school has become only half the battle. Like many students who drive, finding a place to park is the biggest struggle.

Obiora first takes his sister to the Lincoln School. Before looking for a parking spot, he drops his younger brother off at the high school. He normally parks on Clark Road, a seven to 10-minute walk from the high school.

"I'm the only one that's ever late," he said.

He usually parks illegally because there is no parking there from 7 a.m. to 9 a.m. or parking for more than two hours any time between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m.. Obiora said those rules are ridiculous.

"Nobody parks there anyway, even during the middle of the day," he said. "There's lots of spots there, so I don't see what the issue is."

Obiora said he hates tickets, after he got six in the past year.

Junior Temen Kim, who also got a ticket this year for parking on Clark Road, feels similarly.

"I just don't think that students should be penalized for coming to school," he said. "If I'm going to get a ticket for $30 because I need to get to school and there's no other way of getting to school, then I'll just stay home. But I'd rather come to school and get my education."

Kim said that his parents have driven him to school since he got the ticket, but it is really inconvenient for them.

Headmaster's Secretary Kelli McDermott said that the school has made peace with the fact that it is difficult for students to drive.

"We frown upon it. We

Though teachers can park on several streets surrounding the school, students are often restricted to Clark Road, despite morning parking constraints there.

Student boom may begin to affect high school

BSPACE relies on faculty input for future building expansion

JULIANA KAPLAN & ALUA NOYAN
News Writing Editor & News Layout Editor

Due to a rapid increase in the town's student population, the town has considered possible additions or changes to the high school in the coming years. This past summer, the Brookline School Population and Capacity Exploration (BSPACE) committee looked at all the possible issues involving this infusion of students and came up with several solutions.

Starting in 2018, the high school will be filled with a large influx of students that currently makes up classes in the K-8 schools, according to the final report of the BSPACE committee. Unlike the elementary schools, which are tasked with housing the inflated kindergarten class, the high school has a few years to adapt to and prepare for a school population of over 2,500 students.

According to Rebecca Stone, a BSPACE and School Committee member, some of the options that involved the high school that the BSPACE committee worked on were the creation of either a second high school or a 7-12th grade school. Neither of these proposals were ultimately recommended by the BSPACE committee; it only recommended that the current high school expand to accommodate incoming students.

"What the school committee voted just this fall was for the high school expansion to proceed with a process not driven by the proposals and the concept studies, but to begin a much broader high school community process led by the superintendent and the headmaster," Stone said.

Alan Morse, BSPACE committee co-chair and a chair of the School Committee, stressed the importance of the high school community.

"The high school community will be the bulk of the driving force in terms of how it turns out, and included in it is not just how the physical design will look like, but what will be the design from an educational point of view," Morse said.

On June 13, HMFH Architects, Inc. presented several concept studies to the BSPACE committee and the headmaster that proposed turning either the Schluntz or Tappan gyms into classroom spaces. According to Stone and Morse, neither of these solutions will be implemented unless the school administration agrees with the design.

Decisions about future plans for the high school's expansion will now involve a broader high school community process.

Sarah Boehs, a Brookline parent who was active in the BSPACE proceedings this past summer, said that the BSPACE committee did not dedicate much time toward discussing the plans for the high school and why the option of a second high school was ultimately disregarded.

"I am not convinced that enough attention was given to really be convinced about expanding the High School instead of building a second high school or one new high school at a new location," Boehs said. "I think all those options were not necessarily given enough consideration where I could feel confident that expanding Brookline High is the best solution."

Morse stressed the importance of staff and faculty involvement in the decision, saying that they should play an active role in any decision regarding any sort of major change within the school.

"That's the way it has always happened, and that's the way it should always happen," Morse said. "They are going to be impacted and they are going to have to teach there and the kids. That's the community."

School Committee Chair: school quality in jeopardy unless override passes

BEN GLADSTONE
Public Relations Manager

According to School Committee Chairman Alan Morse, the quality of education at the high school is at risk of dropping for all students.

If a tax override to expand the Brookline public schools' budget is not proposed by the Board of Selectmen and passed at the ballot box by town voters, the rapid expansion of Brookline's student population, a 30 percent increase since 2006, according to the Capital Improvements Subcommittee of the School Committee, would be economically unsustainable and would require significant sacrifices, Morse said.

"It would end up reducing the quality of the education that we are able to deliver to every one of our students," he said.

An override would raise Brookline's levy limit, allowing the town government to raise property taxes by a larger percentage this year than it is generally sanctioned to raise them. An override would likely cost Brookline residents a median of $500 annually for single-family homes and $150 annually for condominiums, according to the Final Report produced by the Brookline School Population and Capacity Exploration Committee.

According to Superintendent Bill Lupini, there is a broad host of problems, largely financial, that come with the growth of the student population, ranging from the sizes of common spaces such as the cafeteria to the need for a larger staff.

"Our current operating budget can't support the teachers and supplies and materials and textbooks and technology that's necessary to do the quality of schooling that we've done here in Brookline," Lupini said.

Morse agreed with Lupini's statement, stressing the student to teacher ratio.

"If we have no additional money to build any new classrooms or to hire any new teachers, the only alternative would be to increase our class sizes," Morse said.

According to the Capital Improvements Subcommittee, this year's kindergarten class, which will graduate from the high school in 2025, includes 666 students across the town. By contrast, only 439 students are enrolled in the class of 2014.

"A school district that has 5,500 kids is different from a school district that has 7,500 kids in its culture," Lupini said. "This is just the beginning of what I think is a number of years of these kinds of discussions about how we make sure that we ensure quality."

The Board of Selectmen created an Override Study Committee to investigate the town's financial situation and to make a detailed recommendation to the selectmen regarding the possibility of an override proposal. The committee is also responsible for exploring ways other than an override to find the money that the school system needs.

According to Committee Co-Chairman Susan Ditkoff, who is also the Vice Chairman of the School Committee, the Committee's task is to examine a range of options, including cuts to town programs outside of the school system.

"It's the work of the Override Study Committee to figure out what specifically our most important needs are, how they might grow and how we might address them," Ditkoff said.

According to Ditkoff, raising the levy limit is a complicated issue.

"We have people in town who are struggling financially, so we have to be very aware of the impact at all levels on taxpayers," Ditkoff said.

Morse also noted that an override would affect not only the families of students in the Brookline public schools but also a great many other residents.

"We have to ask all of our citizens to pay more taxes when only about 17 percent of these households actually have students in our schools," Morse said. "We have to worry about the elderly people and other people who are not earning a tremendous amount of money because they may not be able to afford to pay those additional taxes."

In a poll of 150 students, the Sagamore found that there was a diversity of opinion about the potential override, with 46 percent in favor, 35 percent opposed and 19 percent uncertain.

Lupini said that his role in the process of developing an official proposal is centered around presenting information about the potential benefits of an override.

"Our job is to really put forward [the evidence] for people," he said, "so they can see the value in making a commitment to increase their own taxes."

Class of 2014

Senior Mentors

MS. DEBORAH HOLMAN, HEADMASTER

Dear BHS Class of 2014,

You made it! Congratulations. I'd like to commend you on your four years of high school learning and achievement. Your Brookline High education will serve you well as you move forward into our grand and diverse world. Please continue your good work of learning, creating, innovating, and being a good citizen in our democratic society. As you experience life's challenges, remember the BHS motto of "hard work over time." You have lived that motto here, so now apply and live it beyond the walls of BHS. It is a motto that all ambitious young adults should use to guide them. Through your hard work over time, you can achieve anything. I thank you for leading the high school this year. The faculty and I appreciated your leadership in drama, the Sagamore, Murivian, athletics, clubs, student government, and many more aspects of the school this year. Keep your heads up, good luck in all that you do, and remember to come back to BHS and let us know how you are doing.

Class of 2014's

How can I express the joy and exhilaration I've felt serving and supporting you over the last four years with mere words? You have been a wonderful class since September 2010, when you filed into the quad with your advisors and junior mentors. Dean Lande and I then led you in a balance exercise as a metaphor for how to navigate the opportunities and challenges of Brookline High School. And now, almost four years later, you are ready to embark on your next set of opportunities and challenges.

All of us at BHS hope you take some of our school with you: the need to work hard over time, to earn freedom with responsibility, and to recognize that your actions foster legacy that is both individual and communal.

I will miss you and am so excited to hear about your future successes.

SENIOR ADVISORS

It was truly a pleasure to teach math to many of you during your freshman and sophomore years. Then when Dean Lande retired last year I became your associate dean, I felt great privilege in being chosen to care for you and watch over you in your final year at BHS.

Seeing you grow and change over the past four years from young adolescents to young adults has been a real source of pride for me. But whether I met you as a ninth grader, a twelfth grader, or just passed you in the halls, all of you are part of this class which I will remember with great affection.

Remember to always be in the moment and also envision your future, know that asking for help is not a sign of weakness, and be the person you want to be.

Congratulations, Class of 2014!

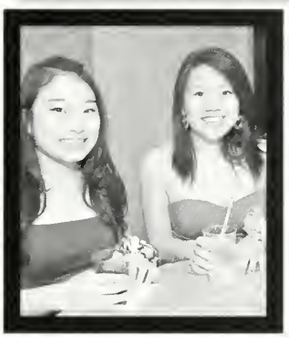
BRA

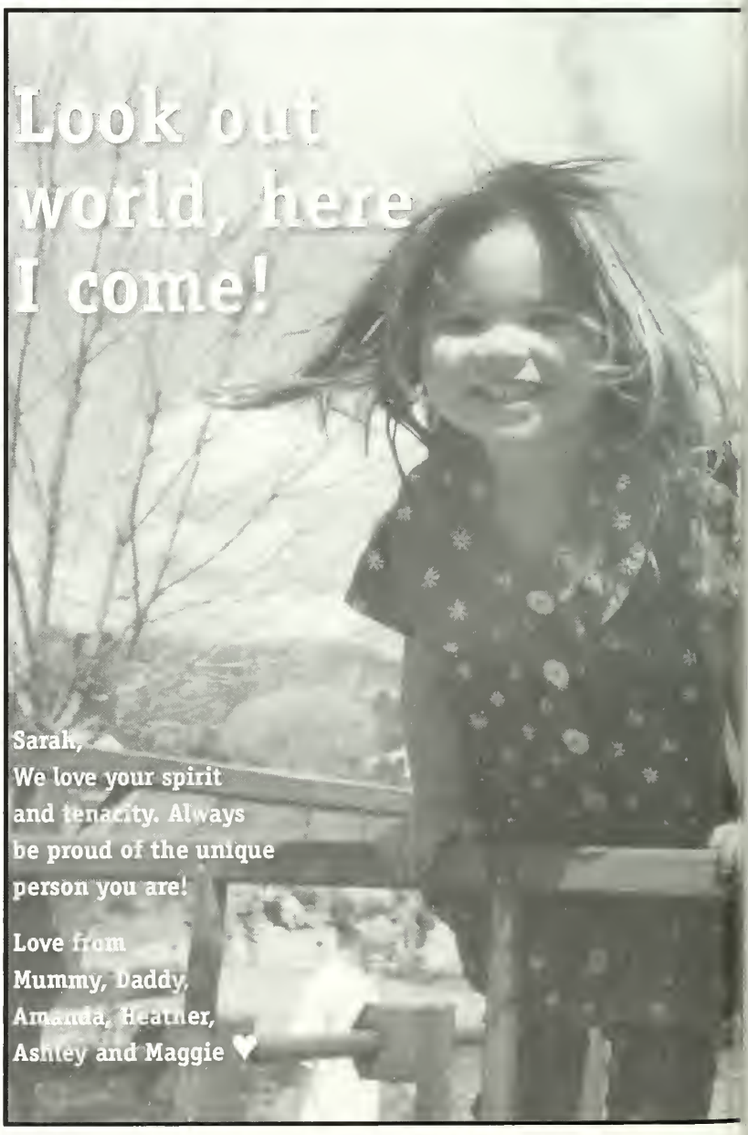


We are so proud of you Elena!
Congratulations to you and the class of 2014.
Love from Mom, Dad, Eva and Lili.

Dear Talia,

We are filled with pride in who you are and what you have accomplished. May your leadership, dedication and positive spirit continue to take you where you want to go in life. And may you and your classmates of BHS 2014 be blessed with good health, long life, and much success!

Love,
Mom, Dad, Yuli, and Brady



Sarah,
We love your spirit and tenacity. Always be proud of the unique person you are!

Love from
Mummy, Daddy,
Amanda, Heather,
Ashley and Maggie ♥

Breanna Raven Alison Flattes

Breanna I love you, and am proud of the woman you are becoming. already at your age you have accomplished so much more than I had at your age and I know you won't stop anytime soon. I wish success and nothing less in your life.
I'm proud to call you my sister.
Love Big Bro Ra-Shaun

You have reach the halfway mark. Now it's time to go for the finish line. I'm so proud of you.
Love Nana

Sweet Thang,
Congratulations!!! Papa is proud of you!!!
Love Papa

A new chapter begins and as always we know you will take it head on. Remember failing is not getting what you want, failing is not going for what you want, and as your parents we know you will succeed in whatever path you choose.
Love Mom & Dad

Hope thinks nothing difficult; despair tells us that difficulty is insurmountable. Watts.
I'm super proud of you Breanna, and will be there for you as you step out into the real world.
Love Godfather Patrick

Congratulations Boo,
As you go on to your next phase of life. ..continue to be "awesome and amazing"
